POTATOES AND NON-POTATOES

We hereby extend a call for help:

Will someone kindly step forward and explain to us—define—the meaning of the now fashionable term "non-Zionist"?

You will probably recall Theatatus' definition of mathematics as the "science which is taught by Theodorus." By analogy you might say that "non-Zionists are a species of bipeds first discovered by Louis Marshall." Such a definition will probably be good history. But it will hardly be good description. What is a "non-Zionist"?

We have eaten in our day a good many bags of potatoes. We have a pretty fair notion of what is a potato. But we are as ignorant as a new-born babe as to what is a non-potato. We have never eaten one—fried, boiled, mashed, or otherwise—have never even seen one. As a matter of fact we doubt whether any exist.

We have heard chemists with a flair for accuracy of speech decry the use of the term "antiseptic" when applied to substances like boracic acid or hydrogen peroxide. The proper description, they claimed, would be "a septic" or "non-septic". By which they meant that these substances are merely sterile. There is a distinction between indifferent sterility and active negation.

Zionism is a theory of the significance of Jewish group life. It renders intelligible the phenomena of Jewish history, and seeks to order the future in harmony with the principles which are observed to be operative in Jewish life. Zionists are people who choose to interpret Jewish existence in the terms of the Zionist version. Now it is conceivable that other people might refuse to accept the premises which form the basis of Zionist thought, and prefer to operate with different sets of notions. The result would be the creation of different sets of conclusions. Where the differentiate are not fundamental, the consequences though varying, are not conflicting. Thus we get different shades of Zionism, disagreeing in some details, but belonging basically to one category of thought. Where the general biases run at cross purposes, however, it is not only impossible to achieve a harmony of tendency, but it is even impossible to accomplish a state of neutrality. On the one hand there is the Zionist. On the other hand, there is, let us say the internationalist. The internationalist will say to the Zionist: My philosophy of life is different from yours. I believe yours is wrong. Therefore, in upholding mine I must oppose yours, the wrong one. I cannot swallow Zionism. I must be an anti-Zionist." There are many other doctrines bearing on the meaning of Jewish existence. Insofar as they touch Zionist ideas they are either sympathetic or hostile. Their disciples must either be Zionists or anti-Zionists. Non-Zionism is a state of non-being.

There is the old Hegelian formula that "negation implies affirmation." But negation to be affirmative must be active. Blank negation can produce blank affirmation, which is nothing. True negation must present a contrast, an alternative, to that which it negates. By projecting the two contradictory phases it is possible to work out a new principle which can reconcile the conflicting elements. Thus

THE LOVE FEAST IN NEW YORK

BY RABBI FERDINAND M. ISSERMAN

From the New York Times we gathered the information that the meeting of non-Zionists in New York City last Sunday called by Mr. Louis Marshall resulted in the unanimous approval of the Jewish Agency scheme by American non-Zionist leaders. Whether these leaders will be able to swing into line some of their followers who have developed a phobia against Palestine is problematical. We are inclined to believe that in time our non-Zionists will become as enthusiastic over Palestinian agricultural colonies as they have over Russian. But this conference, even if its material aid to the Zionist cause may be negligible, will be of great value if it will help to heal the breach that has existed in almost all American Jewish communities—the breach which was social, religious and geographical. The rich aristocratic Reform Germans versus the humble democratic Orthodox East-Europeans. The relations between these two groups were hostile and bitter. The community causes suffered. The one group rallied around Federation; the other around the Zionist organization. We hope that the Jewish agency will help unite these two warring factions. To the humble Zionist worker the New York conference was a great vindication. These workers, sneered at and scorned for many years, who toiled on patiently and courageously despite the greatest of difficulties with leadership that until recently was weak and inarticulate, have compelled the old guard leaders of Judaism to recognize the merit of their cause, and to wrest their support for the reconstruction of Palestine.

WAS IT A BACKWARD STEP?

In all of the Reform synagogues on the continent the Simchath Torah festival had been abolished for many years. It was dropped partially because only the first and last days of the major holy days are observed in liberal synagogues, but more so because the leaders of Reform Judaism did not cherish the spectacle of making a fetish, an object of almost idolatrous adoration of the Torah. Hence Simchath Torah was dropped. A few years ago Rabbi Morris Lazaron, one of the brilliant leaders of the new generation in the American rabbinate, successfully reinstated the Simchath Torah festival in his Reform synagogue. He modified considerably the Orthodox practises of that day. He organized three processions of the Torahs. The first was participated in by the old men of the synagogue; the second by the active trustees, and the third by the recent confirmants. These three processions were preceded by appropriate prayers concerning the past, the present and the future of Judaism. During the marching, the assembled congregation rose and joined in singing appropriate portions of the Hallel prayers. The result of Rabbi Lazaron's experiment was most gratifying. The congregation responded enthusiastically, and now Simchath Torah has become a beautiful feature of the religious life of his synagogue.

Encouraged by the experience of Rabbi Lazaron, and urged on by

JEWISH YEAR BOOK PLANS

These organizations, through their presidents or other officers, are respectively represented on the Year Book by: Dr. Stephen S. Wise, Rabbi Max Drob, Dr. Lee K. Frankel, Rabbi H. S. Goldstein, Mr. S. Herbert Golden, Mrs. H. S. Goldstein, Major Julius Peyser, Mrs. Irma L. Lindheim, Dr. Henry Keller, Mrs. E. M. Sternberger, Dr. David de Sola Pool, P. Wiernick, Dr. S. Margoshes and Louis Lipsky. Editors of the Year Book will be: Dr. S. Bernstein, Editor of "Yiddishe Volk"; Rabbi Leo Jung, president of the Rabbinical Council of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations; Rabbi J. B. Pollack, Director of School Extension Committee of Union of American Hebrew Congregations; B. G. Richards, executive secretary of the American Jewish Congress; Dr. Elias L. Solomon, honorary chairman of the United Synagogue. The Advisory Board and the Board of Editors will consider more in detail the material to be contained in the Year Book. The present plan is to have: A Statistical Survey of the Conservative, Orthodox and Reform Jewish religious institutions throughout the country; articles and data by leading men on the religious situation wherever Jews live; a survey of Jewish religious literature of the year; a rabbis' "Who's Who"; a review of the outstanding lay leaders of the synagogue; the year's events in the field of Jewish religion; a survey of Jewish communal and social activity throughout the country; a survey of Jewish education and its problems; a study of the music of the synagogue; a survey of Jewish literature and art; a survey of the Jewish press; a review of the outstanding leaders of Jewish communal life; a survey of the activity of Jewish youth, a study of the Jewish sermon. Scholars and specialized writers will be invited to make these studies and surveys. The executive offices are at 113 West 42nd Street, New York City.

COMMENTARIES

JEWISH CONGREGATIONAL FELLOWSHIP

There ought to be a fine spirit of co-operation between various Jewish religious institutions. All synagogues whatever names be ascribed to them, are engaged in one great cause, Judaism. And yet often, very often, a certain amount of pettiness and jealousy are to be observed in inter-congregational life. This, I believe, is due to the sad fact that the average member has reduced his Shul to a "business institution." He looks at his synagogue from a business point of view. He even comes to the conclusion that his synagogue has a sort of monopoly on Judaism. This certainly is un-Jewish. It seems to me that every sincere Jew ought to rejoice when new synagogues spring up in a community. Every loyal Jew ought to glory that there are many spiritual leaders in his city. These help the cause of Israel. With these thoughts in mind I offer the following letter written by the spiritual leader of Shaare Zion Congregation to the Honorary President of Temple Emanu-El.

"My dear Mr. Goldstein:

"Rabbi Stern was good enough to send me an extract from the report you presented at the annual dinner of Temple Emanu-El referring to the cordial relations which exist between Emanu-El and Shaare Zion and their respective Rabbis. Permit me to thank you heartily for such sentiment. It seems to me that what our community needs just now is good-will among our own. With the co-operation of broad-minded leadership, I believe, we shall be able to bring about a large measure of real fellowship within our midst.

"I am,

"Very faithfully yours,

"(Rabbi) Julius Berger."

THE TEN LEADING JEWS OF MONTREAL

A friend asks me to find out through a popular voting contest who are the ten leading Jews of Montreal. I like the suggestion. Hence throughout the month of November any reader may send in the names of the ten Jews whom he considers to be outstanding in the Jewish Community.

RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION IN RUSSIA

I could never understand why Jewry both in Europe and America has been silent these many years concerning the deplorable Jewish religious situation in the Soviet Union. The Jewish Communists are the worst enemies of Judaism. They have made out of Bolshevism a religion. And they want that new religion to replace Judaism. Untold suffering has been brought by these communists upon those Jews who dare to continue in the faith of their fathers. The sad chapter of Jewish martyrdom has yet to be written. Would that organized Jewry throughout the world made some effort to protest against the religious persecutions going on in present-day Russia.

"FROM MY DIARY"

Beginning next week and for weeks to follow I shall give a series of extracts from day to day notes taken on my recent tour of Europe and especially Soviet Russia.

CHALLENGE OF THE WILD

At this time when deer roam through the forest and the tracks of moose and bear are found along the streams, there is aroused in every hunter an urge, a desire to invade the great North Woods, and there, in their natural habitat, match his hunter's skill against the instinct and cunning of these prized forest denizens.

The seasons for big game in Ontario this year are as follows: North of the Mattawa River and main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway to Heron Bay on Lake Superior and south of main line of Canadian National Railway, October 20 to November 25 inclusive; north of Lake Nipissing and the French River and south of Canadian Pacific Railway main line to Heron Bay, November 1 to November 25 inclusive, except that on St. Joseph's Island in District of Algoma [illegible] to November 25 inclusive. South of French and Mattawa Rivers, November 5 to November 20 inclusive.

Special hunters' train leaves Toronto 10.00 p.m. for Sudbury, November 1, 2 and 3.

In New York City, where there are more Jews than in any other city in the world, a high school principal of Brooklyn says that the school system is responsible for the making of many criminals because of the lack of vocational training. This man, Dr. Raynor of Alexander Hamilton High School, claims that the school system leads students to take courses of study for which they are unsuited and in which they fail. When they fail they often become social misfits, habitual failures and even criminals. Although Dr. Raynor blames the school system and names an increase in vocational schools as the remedy for the condition he might also blame parents and name a changed attitude on their part as an aid to cure.

It is especially the Jewish parent whose attitude toward vocational work for his children is open to criticism. The Gentile workman, say a tinsmith, sees no reason why his son should not be a tinsmith if he wants to be or a workman in any other trade. The Jewish rag peddler has other, and what to him are higher, ambitions for his children or at least his grandchildren. A Jew to be anything, to study for anything should have the urge to be a lawyer, a doctor, a dentist or belong to some other profession. If the poor, lowly Jew craves for his son to avoid trades and even business and become a professional man picture the consternation of the cloak manufacturer whose son would like to be an automobile mechanic! This would be an out and out calamity.

The middle-class Gentile who builds his own rock garden and keeps it weeded often has a Jewish neighbour who hires everything done that requires the use of tools, leisurely contemplation and the "waste" of time. He quiets his nerves at pinochle on a bright Sunday afternoon when his Gentile neighbour is making a snow man for the children. He cares to do nothing more strenuous with his hands than to shuffle cards. If he hears his small son say he wants to grow up to be an electrician the father smiles indulgently in the way he might if the boy said he wanted to grow up to be a policeman. Of course he will never really be an electrician. That would be insanity. The boy is going to study hard and learn to be an architect or something else like that.

There is disaster in all this as educators agree. Not every child is suited to study for a profession. That this is so is no disgrace. That parents regard it as a disgrace is the real disgrace. Many students who would be happy and successful at vocational work are expected to shine at studious tasks and to read Dickens when they would rather tinker at wood carving or plumbing fixtures. They have no aptitude for learning to translate Ceasar. Their interest in Latin syntax can never approximate that which animates them when they watch a linotype machine in action. They find studious tasks imposed upon them beyond their taste, aptitude and capacity. They hate being forced as a square peg into a round hole. They turn against authority and their natural inclination is to run away from it. When they become truants from school they often eventually fall in with bad companions and this leads to crime. Those who do not actually become criminals have their early years, which should be bright ones, over-shadowed by the habit and psychology of failure. Their behaviour becomes that of people who expect to fail and the story of the futility of many an adult life begins from this point on.

There doubtless are not enough vocational schools in New York and other cities but there would be if parents demanded them. But parents often not only do not demand vocational schools but also refrain from sending their children to them and often even refuse to do so. It is generally assumed that parents want the best in the world for their children. But they frequently stop short before what really is the best for their children if it fails to coincide with their own ambitions. A parent will sometimes want a child to finish out his, the parent's life, for him. He had always wanted to be a violinist, for instance. He had no opportunity for study of the violin and eventually became a shoe merchant. But he is still sorry and so he wants his son to be a violinist. Instead, you see. Does the youth want to be a farmer? Well, if he does, he's crazy, that's all, and the father will never permit him to be a farmer. He's going to be a nice boy and be a musician.

Then there are the beaming, overproud parents who would almost rather die than admit that their children are unable to take any curriculum on earth and win medals at it. They regard any course as socially inferior which might lead to work with the hands unless of course you except dentistry or surgery, or the like. They are ready and willing to visit upon their children ridicule, abuse and bitter, reproachful nagging in the hope of making over the capacity with which their offspring were born. Occasionally you read of suicide by children in the 'teens, the most shocking kind of suicide because of the time of life in which it is committed and because of what it reveals.

The education of parents in this regard becomes of broad social concern. Their attitude toward vocational training needs treatment if there is to be co-operation between school and home for the good of the child and society. When children are forced into a system of education in which their failure is evident from the start the cruelty and harmful effect is apparent. Their attitude toward the world at large is involved besides their personal development. Their attitude toward law and constituted authority as a natural outgrowth of wrong education makes the matter one of wide importance.—J.I.C.

Mark Gross, age six, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. S. Gross, 24 Dalton Road. He has a little sister, too, and her name is Dorothy Suzanne. If her eyes had been blue she would have been Suzanne Dorothy. Mark spent the summer at Hanlan's Point. His friends there, were Bubbles and Nappie Rotenberg, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Meyer Rotenberg, Kendal Avenue; and Sheila Godfrey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. Godfrey, Kendal Avenue; and Herbert Vise, son of Mr. and Mrs. David Vise, Burnside Avenue. But they are all much younger than Mark. He was complaining one day that he had no companions when his mother reminded him that he had these children to play with. "Do you call that playing?" asked Mark. "I'm only minding them."

HEINE'S MONUMENT IN DUESSELDORF

The city council of Duesseldorf, Germany, where Heine was born, has made its first grant towards the subsidy it is giving for the erection of a public monument to Heine in the town, says the "London Jewish Guardian."

Until recently there was no public monument to Heine anywhere in Germany. The first was that set up in 1926 in the City Park of Hamburg, where Heine spent his early years and where most of his works were published. Until that year, when the seventieth anniversary of Heine's death was observed, the German authorities had never made any acknowledgment of Heine's position as a Germany poet. A member of the German Embassy in Paris, that year, however, acting officially for the Government, placed a wreath on Heine's grave.

Under the regime of the ex-Kaiser, the professors of German literature could not admit Heine to the school textbooks. The ex-Kaiser refused to allow him to be recognized in any way, and even wanted to demolish the Heine memorial erected at Corfu by the Austrian Empress Elizabeth.

ARABS OPPOSED TO ABANDON SITE OF WAILING WALL

The incident at the Wailing Wall last Day of Atooement, when the services were interrupted by British police and several Jews were injured, is continuing to infir the Jewish community of Palestine as well as of the diaspora. Meetings of protest and messages of indignation were sent to the Palestine administration throughout the week from all corners of the world. The Arabs in Palestine have also not been supine in the matter and at a meeting held at the Mosque of Omar decided to fight against any attempt of the Government to make concessions to Jews with regard to the use of the site around the Wailing Wall. With the consent of Colonel Kisch, the Zionist political representative, the Jews have removed the Ark which they had placed on the site for their worship and placed a smaller receptacle for the scrolls. The worshippers at the wall on the second day of Sukkoth were attacked with stones and other missiles by a group of Arabs. The police later arrested two Arabs. The authorities forbade any further demonstrations by Jews or by Arabs in connection with the incident.

The best known Jews of France recently attended a conference held at Strasbourg to discuss questions connected with the preservation and welfare of Judaism in France. M. Aime Palliere presided and among others who delivered addresses were Grand Rabbi Schwartz, M. Lazare Blum of Strasbourg, Madame Rosenthal, President of the Association of Jewish Women of Strasbourg. Palliere's remarkable book which tells of his accepting Judaism, though born in the Catholic faith, has just been translated under the title "The Unknown Sanctuary," the translation having been made by Mrs. Stephen Wise.

Rabbi Simon Silverberg, the senior Dayan of the Plotzk Beth Din, died recently. He occupied his post for the past fifty years and was considered one of the greatest Talmudists in Poland.

EVEREADY
Layerbilt

There's been a revolution in the science of battery building — Eveready has found a way to give you more battery for your money than you ever bought before!

The new Layerbilt principle can be understood by anyone. It simply gives you more current-making elements by packing flat cells like crackers in a box, instead of using many round cells with waste space between.

You actually get the equivalent of a much bigger battery and, of course, it takes much longer to use it up. That's why you should buy Eveready Layerbilts and save money. Now selling at new low prices. Ask your dealer.

The crystal ballroom of the King Edward Hotel, decorated with smilax and baby 'mums in autumn shade, made a background for the bridal party, which passed down the long aisle the length of the ballroom, marked off by white satin ribbon and lovers' knots. Rabbi Ferdinand M. Isserman officiated at the ceremony, and during the signing of the register, Miss Lillian Garfunkel sang "Because." The wedding music was played by Mrs. Maurice Haberman. The bride entered on the arm of her father to the strains of the Lohengrin wedding march, in a moyen age period gown fashioned of ivory satin and valenciennes lace, with fitted bodice and sleeves tapering over the wrists. Her veil was of princess lace, arranged about the face with orange blossoms, and covered by a net train. She carried a bouquet of sweetheart roses and lily-of-the-valley. Miss Jean Smith, sister of the bride, as maid of honour, was in deep pink tulle, with a sequin bodice and a short tulle train, a large blue velvet bow in the back completing the costume. She carried an old-fashioned nosegay of roses and blue corn-flowers. Nat Roth was best man. Miss Billie Goldstone was flower girl and wore an old-fashioned costume of ankle length pink satin in princess style with short puffed sleeves, pink satin slippers and a satin poke bonnet. She carried an old-fashioned nosegay. The mother of the bride was in nude satin with crystals, with a corsage of orchids. The groom's mother wore black and white, made entirely of sequins, with corsage of orchids. Ushers were M. Haberman, I. J. Levitt, L. Sher and H. A. Farber. Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water, power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and its return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

Rabbi Isserman's Editorials

the oft-repeated complaint that the service in the Reform synagogue lacked colour, poetry and imagery, we resolved to attempt the reintroduction of Simchath Torah in the Holy Blossom Synagogue this year. We were filled with considerable misgivings, and wondered whether we would have an attendance. A very large congregation turned out. In our ceremonial, we followed the general outline as suggested by Rabbi Lazaron. We arranged for the procession with the Torah by three generations. At the end of each march the older generation turned the Torahs over to the younger generation, symbolic of the transfer of the responsibilities for leadership in Judaism from one generation to another. Thus the honorary officers and honorary trustees handed over the Torahs, as they had handed over the reigns of leadership to the present active trustees, who now preside over the destinies of the congregation, and who shoulder the chief responsibility for perpetuating the knowledge of Torah. The active trustees in their turn handed the Torahs over to the boys who had become bar-mitzvah in the past year, and these boys were charged by the rabbi to prepare for Jewish leadership in the future. The services to us seemed most impressive and that many in the congregation responded to its symbolism was apparent by the moist eyes that were quite prevalent among the worshippers. We were quite pleased and felt that the objectionable features of an old ceremony had been removed and its beauty and charm had been retained and even intensified.

A few days later we accosted one of the older and more critical members of the congregation whose opinion we value, and asked for the reaction to the innovation. The reply we received was that "It was a step backward." We understand the reaction of that individual, who has been an ardent devotee of Reform and who seems to feel that a revival of this old ceremony was retrogression. Among many Reform and Orthodox the impression seems to be that Reform is a negation, a negation especially of the old ceremonies. But express an appreciation of the beauty of the old ceremonies and ipso facto you read yourself out of the field of liberal Judaism. That seems to be a fallacy cherished by many. It springs from a complete lack of appreciation of the true significance of Reform.

Reform Judaism is not opposed to ceremonies. There is a vital difference between Reform and Orthodox with reference to ceremonies, but the difference is not that Orthodoxy favours the observance of ceremonies and Reform opposes them. The differences is solely one of authority. Orthodoxy thunders, "God decreed ceremonies, and therefore man must observe them." Reform replies "Man developed ceremonies and he may observe those which still appeal, and may reject those which have lost their vitality, and create new ones which may function effectively." One may observe all the old practices and yet be a liberal Jew—if one recognizes their human origin. It may be that the practice of Reform has been to eliminate some of the old customs, but Reform also has created new ones. The organ in the synagogue, the service of confirmation, the harvest festival of children, the sitting together of men and women, the rendition of a sermon, these are some of the new customs Reform has initiated. It may be that the early Reformers were dominated by the evangelical protestant churches, which surrounded them, with their aversion for ritual, so that they made our service too colourless. There is no reason at all why the modern liberal Jew cannot take some of these discarded practices, revitalize them and let them contribute to the spiritual life of Israel.

That Rabbi Lazaron has done with Simchath Torah. He has retained its beauty, discarded the old unsatisfactory meaning, modified and adapted it to the modern needs and given it new significance. [illegible] followed the example of Rabbi Lazaron, and rather than having retrogressed, we believe that we have found another beautiful vehicle for the enrichment of our religious life.

we have the two conflicting ideas of nationalism and internationalism. They seem to be irreconcilable. But the reciprocal negation has led to the evolution of the harmonizing idea of socialist-nationalism, the theories of Moses Hess and Dr. Zhitlovsky. Or take another example: Nationalism involves the notion of a national home. The diaspora suggests the idea of dispersion or national homelessness. Now the formula of "Galuth-Nationalism" (diaspora-nationalism) is an attempt to bring the two opposite ideas into harmony. Nationalism and diaspora are put to sleep side by side.

It would be absurd however to attempt to reconcile Zionism and non-Zionism. You cannot add 1—0. Non-Zionism has no character of its own. Its only glory is that it is not-Zionism. Chemistry is not-Zionism. Bear-hunting is not-Zionism. Bootlegging is not-Zionism. Reconcile them if you please.

In our Zionistic experience we have met people who pleaded non-Zionism. This happened during campaigns when victims were casting about for any excuse that might save them from having to give to Zionist funds. But they were generally people who were too ignorant to work out a theory of anti-Zionism. They could not profess internationalism, or socialism—they were probably too prosperous for these theories. They could not urge assimilationism—their physiognomies and accents and perhaps inadequate means prevented their espousal of this doctrine. Thus rather than subscribe to the Keren Hayesod, they would confess to a state of ideational nullity. They do not believe in Zionism—do not want to believe in it—do not want to believe in anything that costs money.

And will Marshall now trot out for the world's edification a group of men of putative intelligence who will protest that they are still not Zionists, nor anti-Zionists, but "non-Zionists?" One would like to ask them: "Gentlemen, you may be non-Zionists when dealing with the stock market. But when you are concerning yourselves with Zionist questions, why not have the intellectual courage to take a positive stand, one way or the other?" Herzl was a non-Zionist as a journalist. When he approached Zionist questions he became a Zionist. Nordau was a great European. When confronted with Zionism he made his choice. Louis D. Brandeis was a great American, indifferent to Zionism. When Zionism did come within his purview, his vigourous intellect did not hesitate to make a commitment. Our present batch of non-Zionist notables have come face to face with the issue. And they choose to persist in their state of Zionist nudeness, in the sheltering shadows of Mr. Marshall's abstractions, happy in their treasured possession of their Jewish commodity of non-potatoes.

FUND STARTED AT CHILDREN'S HOME

At the Jewish Children's Home a new Educational and Vocational Fund has been started. This fund is to supply the means to give the children a little more than public schooling. In most cases it is imperative since they cannot leave school until the age of sixteen and they are through public school before then. How the children will best be fitted to support themselves and at what they are most adept is what is considered in choosing the line of education. Already the money donated to this fund has made possible a secretarial course for two of the girls who are now holding good positions. Next meeting of the Home, Tuesday, November 6, at 2.30 p.m., at the Federation Building, 179 Beverley Street.

It Came to Pass That——

With this issue the CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW begins a new feature which must prove of absorbing interest to all its readers especially the young folks. It is a history of the Jewish people through centuries recorded by days. This first instalment tells you the outstanding events in the last days of October in the history of your race. Buy a loose leaf note book, clip this first account and paste it in. If you do this every week in time you will possess a hand-book of value. The historian is Cecil Roth. He was born in London, England, in 1899 and attended the City of London School until 1917. After two years of military service in England and France he entered Oxford. He holds the degree of Ph.D. from Oxford and is a fellow of the Royal Historical Society. Mr. Roth is author of "The Last Florentine Republic," and many scholarly articles and essays, among which is one in the current "Menorah Journal."

OCTOBER 26TH

Riots at Cracow, 1407. The blood libel had followed hot on the trail of the Jews when they came to Poland. One of the earliest cases was the present. A priest asserted in one of his sermons that the Jews had murdered a child on the previous night for ritual purposes. The mob swept out of the church and made its way to the Jewish quarter, sacking the houses and killing all those who fell into their hands. The governor of the city collected an armed force and dispersed the rioters, capturing some of the ringleaders. The church bells were sounded to summon the magistrates to come and sit in judgment upon them. The rumour got around, however, that this was intended as a signal to the people that they might fall upon the Jews. A mob collected again and rushed against their quarter. The inhabitants defended themselves gallantly, but without effect, and they were ultimately forced to take refuge in the church of Saint Anna. This was surrounded and set on fire, leaving the Jews no alternative but surrender. Some few apostatised, but the vast majority chose to die rather than abjure their faith. Only the children were spared, being taken by force to be baptized. Meanwhile the fire spread from the church and consumed the whole of the Jewish quarter, which was left in absolute desolation—a mournful monument to its former inhabitants.

OCTOBER 27TH

Last public auto-da-fé in Portugal, 1765. It was two centuries and a quarter since the Inquisition had initiated its activity in the country with the Lisbon auto of September 20th, 1540. In the meantime, many thousands of victims had suffered at the pyre. The series was now rounded off with a last public ceremony in which (as at the first) expiation was made for the crime of Judaism. One or two private autos in which Jews figured followed, until the Holy Office in Portugal was finally shorn of its power by the Marquis de Pombal. Social and political prejudice remained however strong: and thus it is only in our own days that there has been a general movement among the Marranos of the country to return to Judaism.

OCTOBER 28TH

Death of Nahmanides, 1270. The aged Spanish scholar had been forced to abandon his country after his alleged blasphemies at the Disputation of Barcelona (July 20, 1263), despite the freedom of speech which he had been guaranteed. Leaving his family and friends, he made his way to the Holy Land. Here he found everything desolate. The Tartar Invasion of 1260 had left the land an utter waste. The cities were depopulated. Jerusalem itself lay in ruins. Only two Jewish households were to be found in it—brothers, dyers by trade. In their house, when possible, visitors to the city gathered for worship on the Sabbath. Into this state of chaos, Moses ben Nahman introduced a certain amount of order. He recovered the scrolls of the Law which had been taken off for safety to Nablous, and fitted up one of the ruined houses as a synagogue, in which public worship was first held on the New Year, 5028. In addition, he founded a school for talmudic studies, to which students came even from beyond the Euphrates. It was at this period of his life, too, that he finished the commentary on the Pentateuch which he had begun in Catalonia. On his death in 1270, at a ripe old age, he left behind him, in addition to his former titles to fame, the glory of having been one of the rebuilders of the Jewish settlement of the Holy Land.

OCTOBER 29TH

Emancipation in Hesse-Cassel, 1833. The Jews had already enjoyed freedom in this principality during the period when it had formed part of the Kingdom of Westphalia, in which Jerome Bonaparte had emancipated them on January 24, 1808. After the passing of the Napoleonic order, they became reduced once more to the status of "protected subjects," restricted in their civil rights at every turn. The memory of the liberality of the former regime remained, however, strong. Hesse-Cassel was thus predisposed to listen to the agitation for emancipation conducted by Gabriel Riesser. On October 29, 1833, all the Jews of the electorate, excepting pedlars and petty traders, were accorded full civil equality, which it took other states nearly forty years to imitate. This was the earliest instance of full emancipation in Germany.

OCTOBER 30TH

Banking forbidden in Rome, 1682. This was a branch of economic activity which had been left unrestricted even by the oppressive legislation of the Popes of the close of the sixteenth century. The decree of Innocent XI now in question was accordingly among the harshest experienced even in these reactionary days. By it, the Jews of Rome became restricted in their activity to little more than dealing in old clothing. The days of the glory of the community were now over; and within a very few years its wealth was reduced by four-fifths.

OCTOBER 31ST

Banishment from Portugal, 1497. The deadly decree of expulsion had been signed on December 5, 1496. The Jews were, however given eleven months to settle up their affairs and leave the country. As the time-limit approached, King Emmanuel became more and more unwilling to see his erstwhile subjects depart, imperilling their souls and impoverishing his realm at the same time. He determined accordingly to bring as many of them as he could over to what he considered the true faith, by fair means or by foul. The first day of Passover (March 19, 1497) saw the infamous seizure of all young Jews up to the age of twenty-five and their forced baptism. The rest, to the number of some twenty thousand, were ordered to assemble in Lisbon, from which port they were to embark. Arrived here, they were herded together and kept under guard until the time designated for their departure had elapsed. They were then informed that by their insubordination they had forfeited their liberty and become the king's slaves, to be dealt with at his pleasure. There followed a strenuous attempt to make them change their religion as the price of their ransom. When all other means had failed, recourse was made to force. They were dragged to the baptismal font wholesale, or else baptised where they were with the merest travesty of a religious ceremony. Only half a dozen, headed by the Chief Rabbi, Simon Maimi, continued to maintain an open opposition. Buried up to the neck in order to induce him to set an example for his flock to follow, their leader died seven days after, still refusing to yield. His few remaining companions were then permitted to go to Africa—all that was left of the once-famous Portuguese Jewry.

NOVEMBER 1ST

Jews leave England, 1290. After an unsuccessful attempt to regulate Jewish life in precisely the direction he desired, Edward I had issued, on July 18, 1290, a decree of expulsion. All Jews were to leave the country by the feast of All Souls (November 1st), the anniversary, as it happens of the date when they had all been thrown into prison for the purpose of spoliation exactly seventy years previous by John. True to his upright though narrow spirit, Edward extended to the Jews in the meantime a certain degree of protection and security which was rare in such cases. His subjects, however, were not always so compassionate. One master-mariner, who had been hired to convey a large party overseas from London, invited them to disembark upon a sandbank at the mouth of the Thames at low water, and left them to their fate, recommending them to apply for succour to their teacher, Moses, who had proved himself equal to a similar emergency at the Rea Sea. He, as well as others who had despoiled their charges, was hanged. Altogether about 16,000 Jews are said to have left the country—the vast majority going to France. From this date to the middle of the seventeenth century, no authorised settlement was to be found in England. This was the first of the great general expulsions of the Middle Ages, setting the example for the banishment from France a few years later and for the crowning disaster of the exile from Spain in 1492.
